Three different "dialects" of American English exist: formal, standard, and colloquial. Most people think of these three shades, from highly impetuous to the formal style, as standard. These differences in style are affected by traditional aspects of communication, but they are in fact the great divide in American writing, between the formal and the colloquial. It is this divide that we will explore in this course. Colloquial American is more casual, more personal, more direct, and more likely to be used in everyday life. Formal American is more reserved, more formal, and more likely to be used in professional settings. What are the differences between these two styles of writing? How do they affect the way we communicate? What are the implications for the future of American writing?

Other more subtle things to keep in mind is that the way we behave towards others changes when they are in a state of distress. It is also important to be aware of our own emotions and how they affect our behavior.

Classic genuine leather bomber jacket without the sky-high price!

During 1999, the bomber jacket was a symbol of luxury, heralded and derided as the ultimate A-1. It was worn by the affluent elite, by the hip, by the young, by the rebellious. Today, America's love of "bomber" has shifted focus to become America's favorite sportswear style. The bomber jacket is no longer a symbol of status, but a symbol of style.
